Mr. Pearlberg's cheap vacation

By KIRSTIE WILDE

WHAT HAPPENS when you can't pay the bill after a fabulous vacation in Pebble Beach or Carmel? Consider two recent cases:

A female tourist writes a bad check for $294 after staying in Carmel. She was arrested on suspicion of defrauding an innkeeper.

An elderly man doesn't pay a $90,000 bill after living the high life for 56 days at the Inn at Spanish Bay. Not only did sheriff's deputies decline to arrest him when they escorted him out of the hotel, it appears he will escape with no prosecution at all.

The story of that elderly man, 78-year old Henry Pearlberg of Aptos, is fascinating for its utter outrageousness. Pearlberg has been described by police investigators as a con man extraordinaire. He travels first class with an entourage that includes a maid, a chauffeur and a personal assistant. He fast-talked his way into escrow on several multi-million-dollar real estate deals in Pebble Beach before each fell through for lack of funds. He speaks with a proper British accent and is comfortable with the lingo of international banking transactions. He knows how to spend money, that's for sure. The only problem is, Mr. Pearlberg apparently doesn't have any.

Sheriff's investigation

After the story of Henry Pearlberg's $90,000 hotel bill broke in The Pine Cone last May, it seemed clear to Monterey County Sheriff's investigator David Luna that Pearlberg was guilty of something. "He checked into the hotel using a $10,000 security deposit, which he used up in five days. He had no funds in any bank account to pay the rest of the bill. If I could show intent, I'd have a case for grand theft, a felony," Luna said.

The investigator has worked for months to put a case together against Pearlberg, but so far the District Attorney's office has declined to prosecute. The issue of "intent" may be difficult to prove in a court of law because Pearlberg did

Poverty in MoCo: How bad is it?

By PAUL MILLER

A REPORT this week by a Sacramento advocacy group that more than 25 percent of Monterey County's young children are living in poverty surprised many residents of the county's affluent areas, where stopping the construction of new housing — not providing it — is a common goal.

The report, issued Tuesday by the group Children Now, was called "shocking, but not surprising" by social workers and leaders of local charity groups.

"We really have almost two different counties," said Esmeralda Guardado, administrative assistant at the Salvation Army in East Salinas, a facility that serves dinner to between 50 and 100 children each night. "Rents are so high that many families don't have any money left at the end of the month for food."

"There's a lot of need among the ag workers in the Salinas Valley, particularly this time of year when income from harvesting is much less," said Jim Sanchez of Dorothy's Kitchen. The organization serves lunch to about 250 people a day and distributes rice and beans to families in Monterey County labor camps.

Social workers interviewed by The Pine Cone were unanimous that inadequate housing and lack of proper nutrition among young children are major concerns in Monterey County, but they also said the county's network of government and private assistance programs has been quite successful at eliminating hunger among Monterey County's neediest children.

"A caring adult can feed their family in Monterey County, if they know where to go for help," said a prominent social worker, who requested anonymity. "There's a great deal more coordination now than there used to be, and that's filling the gaps."

What is poverty?

The Children Now report was based on extensive studies of poverty in America conducted by the United States Census Bureau. The census bureau's report, released earlier this year, contains poverty figures throughout the U.S. for the year 1995.

According to the census bureau, a family of four lived

Pirated identity used in cell phone fraud

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE FIRST reported case of identity theft to occur in Carmel hit Philip Bunce and his wife, Erin Leigh Farquar, this month. A thief opened a Cellular One account for three phones in Farquhar's name and dialed up $650 worth of phone calls before the deed was discovered.

"It's unusual for someone down here to have that happen," said Carmel Police Detective Sgt. Pete Poitras.

Bunce and Farquhar notified Carmel Police after receiving the bill — on which Farquhar's name was slightly misspelled — and realizing the calls charged to them weren't theirs. Farquhar does not even own a cell phone.

Bunce does, however, and said he initially thought the invoice was his. "But when I stopped and looked at the bill, I saw $650, and I thought, 'This couldn't be right,'" he said. "I

Carmel City Council hits prime time

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CARMEL CITY Council meetings are about to become up close and personal — as near as your living room. City officials are putting the finishing touches on a plan to provide sophisticated TV coverage of every meeting.

The city is finalizing a deal with the Monterey County Office of Education to broadcast council meetings on a new cable channel set up specifically for Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Ultimately, city officials hope the 24-hour-a-day channel will be able to broadcast meetings of various city commissions as well as city events, like the birthday parade.

"It's very exciting," said Carmel City Councilwoman Paula Hazdovac. "The council chambers only seats about 40 people. Practically speaking, how many people can actually attend a council meeting? This way, everybody can see what's going on."

"It will give a lot more exposure to the city's actions and proposed actions," said Carmel City Councilman Marshall Hydorn. "It's all win-win."

Hydorn and Hazdovac have been working with Carmel city staff on a plan to provide far more advanced technology than other local cities, such as Pacific Grove and Seaside, have been using.

Hazdovac

Four "voice activated" cameras will catch the council in action. "When each person speaks each camera zooms to the person speaking," Hazdovac explained.

Instead of relying on a camera set up in the back of the room, viewers will get a more interactive feeling from two cameras capturing the council from both sides of the dais. Other cameras will be set up to capture the audience and speakers at the podium.

The project will be funded by special fees collected from Carmel customers every month by the local cable company, which was recently acquired by AT&T. Ever since the city adopted a new 10-year contract with the cable provider in October 1998, the company has been collecting 90 cents from each subscriber every month, Hazdovac explained.

Those fees add up to approximately $30,000 a year (collected

Council waits for business community to show it the money

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CARMEL City Council heard more details last week about a proposal for a "business improvement district" to fund promotional and service projects in the commercial district. Councilmembers said they like the idea, but they made it clear that making it become a reality is up to Carmel's businesses.

"It was a great idea to come forward," said Carmel City Councilwoman Sue McCloud. "I think we should wait to do anything more until we understand there's a grand swell from the business district. They should bring it to us."

The assessment district — which was proposed last month by a group of local business people — could generate $750,000 annually to promote the city and provide improvements to downtown parks, street lighting, parking facilities, benches and trash receptacles.

The money could also be used for music, promotion of public events, decorations and other "beneficial activities."

If Carmel's businesses and the city council agree to create the assessment district, hotels would be assessed at a rate of 1 percent of room sales in a year while retail business and restaurants would pay $2 per $1,000 gross annual sales.

Proponents say the funds derived from hotels could total $350,000 while the retail business could bring in as much as $400,000 annually.

Carmel City Administrator Jere Kersnar — who presented a report to the council at the Nov. 2 meeting — said the formation of a business assessment district can be halted if more than 50 percent of the businesses protest.

Businesses would have the opportunity to protest the assessment each year and if 50 percent of the members agree, they can also reject any portion of the proposed activities they don't like.

"Every year potentially the thing could go away," Kersnar said.

The weight of each business' protest vote would be determined by the size of its assessment.

Some people who spoke at the council meeting were concerned about how much say the city would have over the business district's activities.

"I don't know what this is going to look like, feel like or sound like," said Suzanne Paboojian, who wondered if the assessment district money would be used for improvements or activities not in keeping with the Carmel General Plan.

Kersnar explained that all of the district's proposals will have to undergo the same city review process that all projects endure.

"Our main thrust is for businesses to get together and find a funding mechanism which will benefit the business community and residents," said Csaba Ajan, one of the organizers.

Members of the Carmel Business Association had their first in-depth look at the proposal during a Nov. 11 meeting at La Playa Hotel.

"We wanted to explain how comparable districts work in other communities, and how the assessment would apply to different types of businesses," said organizer Tom Glidden. "It's the first step in gaining consensus," Glidden said.

In response to a requirement that trees near the C.V. Vintage Airfield be cut, the county may choose to save the oak trees lining Lupin Lane and let the airport founder.

'ounty can't see the airport for the trees

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A ROW of oak trees may result in the nporary shut-down of the Carmel Valley ntage Airfield in the Carmel Valley lage. It might even put the airport out of siness for good.

At question are trees located on county perty along Lupin Lane, Poppy Lane and ac Lane.

The trees interfere with the open naviga- airspace required by state regulations d the Public Utilities Code, according to orney Joseph Karnes speaking for airport nager Lars De Jounge.

But the Monterey County Board of pervisors might decide that the trees ould stay and the airport should go.

"We'd rather shut the place down because it's wrong to destroy public resources for a nonconforming use," said Supervisor Dave Potter's aide, Jody Parsons.

The roughly 30 acres inhabited by the airport are zoned for a low-density housing development — one unit per acre — according the the county assessor's office. Because the 59-year-old airport predates the Carmel Valley Master Plan, it was "grandfathered," and is therefore considered legal nonconforming by the county.

Karnes said the airport has the right to remain in the Village.

"I can offer only one comment: The Carmel Valley Master Plan, while it identi-

Cardinales will be souped-up by the end of the month

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AFTER MONTHS of gearing up for a special soup election, Gaspar Cardinale said he was surprised when the soup, salad and sandwich controversy was resolved by the Carmel City Council last month.

In fact, the Cardinales were so focused on winning the right to sell soup that the soup itself was left on the back burner.

"When this thing went through so quickly, it caught us unprepared," Gaspar Cardinale told The Pine Cone.

With the bureaucractic struggle over and done with, Caffe Cardinale is working out deals with xrestaurants and caterers who will provide the soups and sandwiches.

"We'll be in charge of the menu," Cardinale said.

The Cardinales will also have to make a few refinements to their Ocean Avenue cafe, including the addition of soup warmers.

"We're trying to put everything together and we'll be repainting," Cardinale said. "We hope to be ready by the end of the month."

The Cardinales first applied to the city to serve the lunchtime foods in their cafe in February 1998. However, they ran into trouble with the newly approved food ordinance, which established strict categories for Carmel restaurants.

The ordinance, intended to protect Carmel from fast food and litter, allowed Caffe Cardinale to sell just two types of food — coffee and pastries.

Last month, after Cardinale got more than 600 signatures on a petition calling for a change in the ordinance, the council voted 3 to 2 to change the law without putting the matter before the voters.

Carmelites invited to send 'snapshots' of 1999 far into the next century

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CARMEL HERITAGE is preparing to launch a high-tech time capsule that members hope will land well into the 21st Century. If all goes according to plan, the airtight aluminum capsule — filled with everything from official city documents to menus — will be sealed on Dec. 31, 1999, and buried near the First Murphy House.

An inventory and map will be left at the mayor's office and two other locations with instructions for the capsule to be opened on Dec. 31, 2049.

Dick Ely, one of Carmel Heritage's directors and an engineer with 30 years of experience with time capsules, helped the organization by designing the capsule, which was custom built according to his specifications in Morgan Hill.

"Everyone is invited to contribute something to the capsule," Ely said.

A selection committee consisting of members of Carmel Heritage and City of Carmel officials will make the final decisions about what items will be part of the capsule.

Ely encouraged Carmelites to send in family trees and letters addressed to their children. "There are literally thousands of pieces of paper that could fit inside," he said.

The capsule is approximately one foot in diameter and three feet long.

Elaborate precautions will be made to ensure the capsule and its contents remain intact for the next 50 years. When the container is sealed, it will be flushed with the inert gas, nitrogen, in order to force all the oxygen and moisture out of the cylinder, Ely said.

An aluminum capsule was designed because when the aluminum oxidizes, it will develop an "impenetrable barrier" on the outside of the capsule, Ely explained.

The capsule will most likely be buried about three to four feet deep — "deep enough not to be vandalized, but not so deep as to be inaccessible," Ely said.

Dick Ely, an engineer and a Carmel Heritage director, helped design the aluminum capsule that will capture the essence of 1999 Carmel.

After all, Carmel wants to be sure its future residents and leaders don't forget about the time capsule. Many in town have heard about a time capsule buried in the 1950s somewhere near the Carmel Fire Station, but no one can figure out where it is exactly.

Some of the items proposed for the capsule include plans for the development of Carmel, newspaper articles about current civic issues — raccoons, pitch canker, water and traffic — and city leaders' predictions for the future.

The time capsule may also include more revealing items like advertising pieces, autographs from local celebrities, Beanie Babies, calendars, a list of registered voters, Carmel High's yearbook, menus, real estate prices, coins and stamps.

"It's a unique way to take a snapshot of Carmel at the end of the millennium and let our descendants see and feel and understand what it was like in December of 1999," Ely said.

Carmelites are invited to bring their personal contributions to the time capsule to First Murphy House up to Dec. 15. The group, which funded the $1,000 project, is also accepting donations to help cover the costs.

Risky intersections leave some locals at their wits' end

By TAMARA GRIPPI

LOCALS WHO have witnessed irate drivers, confused tourists and near misses at the intersection of San Carlos and Fifth (just uphill from the Carmel Post Office) say its about time something should be done — namely a new stop sign.

But police and city officials who keep tabs on Carmel's busy intersections say another stop sign would only add to the troubles on that street.

The basic problem is that drivers heading south on San Carlos — many of whom are tourists — fail to realize that the folks driving east on Fifth Avenue don't have a stop sign.

Alan Cordan, who owns a realty office on the corner, has observed traffic there for the last seven years.

"The tourist (on San Carlos) stops for the sign and then goes, thinking people coming the other way will have to stop," Cordan said. "But the locals are very rude. They come up that street like they own it. Nothing is going to get in their way of crossing the intersection."

Cordan believes that until a stop sign is installed for the drivers coming up Fifth Avenue, the city is just flirting with disaster.

But according to Carmel Police Chief Don Fuselier, the number of accidents that have occurred at that intersection is actually fairly low: four accidents in the last five years.

City officials say installing a new stop sign on the crest of a hill for the up-bound traffic is never a good idea.

"Cars with manual transmissions have to come to a full stop and you have the problem of rolling back," Fuselier said.

And while it looks like the cars are racing up Fifth Avenue, in reality, they're probably only traveling 12 to 14 miles per hour, Fuselier added.

The city's public works department has already taken some of the danger away by taking out shrubbery that had been blocking drivers' views.

Residents who venture out onto another risky intersection — Junipero and Second — will soon have a safer street once the city begins a redesign plan approved by the city council Nov. 2.

Carmel Public Works Director Jim Cullem has obtained federal and state grants totaling $400,000 to consolidate the intersections of Camino Del Monte and Second and Junipero and Camino Del Monte into one intersection.

In addition, the plan would simplify the Junipero and

Riley Ranch B&B gets thumbs up from supes

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AN OLD stone house, barn and cottage near Point Lobos can be converted to a 10-unit bed and breakfast, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors decided Nov. 9. Supervisors voted 3 to 2 — with Supervisor Dave Potter and Chair Judy Pennycook dissenting — to deny an appeal by the Big Sur Land Trust (BSLT) and the Department of State Parks and Recreation.

Supervisor Lou Calcagno supported the project, saying, "I think it's ideal. Would I be for converting barns to bed and breakfasts? No. But for this one? Yes."

The project — headed by Rancho Chiquita Associates and Ted Richter — is next to Point Lobos State Reserve and is partially surrounded by the Point Lobos Ranch, purchased by the land trust in 1993 and which will eventually become part of the state parks system.

Ken Gray, State Parks superintendent, said, "The basis of the appeal is to try to protect the public's investment of $20 million to protect scenic and biological resources of the Point Lobos area."

A commercial barn, stone house and cottage near Point Lobos will remain the same on the outside after they are converted to a 10-unit B&B.

Potter and the appellants voiced concern over the example the project might set.

"This could set a precedent. Staff fails to address the cumulative impact of such conversions," said Zad Leavy, executive director and general counsel for the BSLT. Leavy said other nearby property owners might also want to convert. "We're talking about a lot of development within a future state park."

But project supporters asserted the change from a single-family residence and commercial barn to a bed and breakfast

CELL PHONE

noticed there were three cell phones on this bill and none of them matched our number."

On the bill were "hundreds and hundreds of calls," Poitras said. Ninety-five percent of them were based in the Oakland area, with the remaining five percent scattered around the country.

One number was dialed 65 times, with durations ranging from a few minutes to more than an hour, Poitras said. Oakland Police are reportedly tracking down the recipient of those calls in hopes of learning more about the caller.

The case has been turned over to the Oakland Police Department since the fraud appears to have occurred in its jurisdiction. There is no paper trail for the phone order — the thief had to have Farqhuar's name, address, Social Security number and California driver's license number to order the services over the phone.

"We haven't lost anything which had all that information on it," Bunce said. "We're none the wiser as to how all that information was obtained."

Poitras advised Bunce and Farqhuar to get a credit check to assure no other accounts were opened in their names. Since the account was opened fraudulently, Cellular One will absorb the costs, according to Bunce.

The incident serves as another reminder that big city crimes occasionally find their way into Carmel, Poitras said.

"It's one form of identity theft," he said. "It's a big problem in the areas surrounding Monterey County, but so far it has been limited here."

B&B

would not intensify the use or result in more development at all, and would be welcome in the area.

According to Paul Davis, the architect for the project, the Carmel Area Land Use Plan encourages visitor-serving businesses in the area.

"The planning commission unanimously and enthusiastically approved the project, agreeing this was the highest and best use in an area of such high public resources," he said. "It makes sense to have accommodations."

Davis also said that while the buildings will be refurbished, they will not be changed from the outside, and that a much-needed left turn lane will be built on Highway 1 to make turning onto Riley Ranch Road safer.

The proposed water use — with water taken from an established system on the property — will be less than the historic use of 9.54 acre-feet of water, according to Davis.

Potter called into question the quality of that water.

"The issue here is for process and precedent — we don't have data from the health department saying the water is fit for human consumption. We have the precedent-setting aspect of the barn conversion and lack of an entire development plan for the Point Lobos Ranch area," he said. "I won't support the project as it is."

The area currently falls under the umbrella of the Carmel Area Land Use Plan. County planning staff said a comprehensive plan for the Point Lobos area is unnecessary, since most of the area was placed in scenic easement and the project is consistent with the restrictions in the area.

Acting County Counsel Adrienne Grover and Planning Director Bill Phillips said the barn conversion would not set a precedent.

PEARLBERG

pay part of his bill. (He sold his Jaguar weeks later and turned the proceeds over to Spanish Bay. The balance owed is now approximately $70,000.)

His advanced age, his charming demeanor, his ability to appear doddering when it suits his purpose, all add up to a case prosecutors are not confident of winning. "The jury will see him as everybody's grandpa," said one source. "He'd con them just like he did everybody else."

Henry Pearlberg's bizarre dealings in Pebble Beach date back several years. High-end real estate broker Michael Canning first met him when Canning had the multi-million dollar Jenkins estate on the market. Pearlberg expressed an interest in buying it, but something about his demeanor made Canning wary.

"He was too flamboyant, spoke too loudly about his financial wherewithal. His explanation of his source of funds was a mystery at best," Canning said. "I told him he had to wire in the full purchase price, $10 million in cash, to escrow before I would write up an offer." Needless to say, the money never arrived.

Then Pearlberg called Tom Bruce, another experienced Pebble Beach realtor, and proceeded to get into escrow on three estates at the same time: one for $6.9 million, one for $5 million, one for $4.5 million.

"The money never seemed to come through, and I concluded that this was an individual that I didn't want to work with," Bruce said.

Greg Kraft represented the seller on one of those deals. "He got us all excited, and then there was nothing to back it up," Kraft said. "I kept thinking of the line in that movie 'Jerry Maguire': Show me the money!"

Broker Ruth LaGrange got the "Pearlberg treatment" twice: the most recent was just two weeks ago, when a man using an alias said he was ready to purchase a Sleepy Hollow residence she had listed at $2.6 million.

"The agent introduced him as Mr. Coleman, but I recognized him right away," LaGrange told The Pine Cone. "I waited and then quietly told his agent later, "That's no Mr. Coleman. That's Henry Pearlberg!"

The young agent, Nick Glaser, chalked up his run-in with Pearlberg as an educational experience.

"It's tough to sit somebody down and say, 'Show me your bank account or you're not getting into my car.' He was such a great actor. But you know, if something seems too good to be true, it is." Glaser is no longer representing Mr. Coleman/Pearlberg.

Pearlberg, using his alias, also recently engaged a Carmel Valley luxury hotel in talks about renting one of its best suites on a long-term basis, sources told The Pine Cone.

Took some little guys, too

Pearlberg's past is littered with the shattered hopes of people who claim he took advantage of them. Jeanette DeRosa was hired by Pearlberg in 1997 to be his personal assistant, but he strung her along for months, always promising that the $2,000-per-month job would start "any day," she said.

"He told me to book a Lear jet and plan the menu to be served on board," DeRosa said. At the last minute, he declined to pay the $121,000 fee for the private jet, instead flying first class on Virgin Atlantic with an entourage of five, according to DeRosa. One hour after arriving at the Four Seasons Hotel in London, he fired her.

"I received only part of my salary. The chef who worked for him wasn't paid, neither was the San Francisco agency hired to find employees for him," DeRosa said.

A former "personal aide," John Sexton, got a judgment against Pearlberg for his back wages of $40,000, according to investigators, but he doesn't believe he'll ever see the money.

Pearlberg's landlady also waited years to be paid the rent on the Aptos condominium she rented to Pearlberg, according to real estate agent Steve Byrd. "He apparently came into chunks of money occasionally," Byrd said. "He paid three years' worth of rent one day, and the next he was driving a brand-new Jaguar."

One private security consultant who has chased Pearlberg for months to get payment on a past-due bill said, "He has a Ph.D. in convincing people to do business with him. A charming man, you would want him at your next party. Just lock up the silverware."

Pearlberg and his wife Hazel declared bankruptcy in Los Angeles in 1992, showing liabilities of $536,328. State and Federal tax documents show he owed a total of $164,000 in back taxes in 1997.

Pearlberg spoke to The Pine Cone on at least six occasions during the past four months, always promising to explain his side of what he called "this misunderstanding" in a week or two. Always polite and charming, Pearlberg disarmed this reporter along with everybody else.

Calling in the big boys

But is Pearlberg's good luck changing? Investigator Dave Luna hopes it is. "I'm very frustrated. I want to get this guy," he said last week.

Luna put out a Teletype to law enforcement officers nationwide, hoping to hit on something that would finally nail Henry Pearlberg.

"Believe it or not, I got a response from the FBI out of Chicago, which is investigating Pearlberg in connection with a $12 million scheme back there," Luna said.

TELEVISE

from Carmel-by-the-Sea cable subscribers).

Carmel's contract with the Monterey County Office of Education will cover the 10-year lease of the TV production equipment as well as an operator who will be running a production room set up in City Hall.

The city will also have access to the county's 170-seat production studio in Salinas and a mobile camera that can be used to videotape city celebrations.

Initially there will be a time delay between the actual meetings and their TV broadcast, but city officials are hopeful that eventually live coverage will be available.

If the council approves the TV plan at its December meeting, cameras and equipment could be installed as early as February. The county would contract out the installation to the Waterford Group, a production company in Fremont.

Council members are enthused about the prospect of TV coverage at their meetings, though they most likely won't get quite as much small-screen attention as they did in the days of Clint Eastwood's mayorship. Dozens of crews from around the world swamped the small village when he was elected Mayor in April 1986.

"The new service will expand everyone's view of what the council does and the personalities of council members will come forward a little more — not that we want this to be a show biz thing," Hydorn said.

Milestones

A memorial service will take place Nov. 21 for ALLEN (BUZZ) KNIGHT III, a native of Carmel and retired Mills High School drama teacher and counselor, who died Nov. 7 at his Burlingame home. He was 63.

Mr. Knight was the son of the late Allen Knight II, former mayor of Carmel, and the late Adele Knight. He graduated from Carmel schools and attended MPC and U.C. Santa Barbara. He earned his teaching credential and master's from S.F. State University. Mr. Knight began a long association with U.C. Berkeley in the 1960s when he became program director at the Lair of the Bear.

He performed in and directed numerous theatrical productions, both here and on the San Francisco Peninsula.

Mr. Knight is survived by his wife, Brooke, of Burlingame; his two sisters, Alys Bliesner and Allene Fremier, both of Carmel; and eight nieces and nephews.

His memorial service will begin at 2 p.m. Nov. 21 at the Episcopal Church of St. Matthew in San Mateo. The family suggests that memorials be made to the Allen Knight Memorial Fund, Peninsula Civic Light Opera, 428 Peninsula Ave., San Mateo, CA 94401.

O.W. "BILL" IRWIN, 98, the long-time president/owner of Credit Bureau of the Monterey Peninsula and Carmel's Mayfair House Apartments, died Nov. 3 at his Monterey home.

Mr. Irwin graduated from Oregon State University and was a member of Delta Tau Delta Fraternity.

He served on the first California Collection Agency board and was a member of the Associate Credit Bureaus, Inc., receiving the distinguished service award. He also earned the Silver Beaver Award from the Boy Scouts of America.

His many affiliations included Kiwanis, Rotary and Monterey Peninsula Country Club. Mr. Irwin resided in Carmel and Pebble Beach for many years, and moved to Monterey in 1991.

Survivors include his son, Martin W. Irwin of Carmel.

The Golden Years

Mother Nature is not always nice. Hurricanes and tornados have had devastating effects on people for generations. Psychologists compare victims of natural disasters to war survivors. There are feeling of anxiety, helplessness, los of control, anger, depression, and irritability. Psychological counselors encourage victims to talk out their feelings in order to prevent delayed emotional effects about conditions, which are completely out of our control.

After appearing in a ten-minute short film, Singapore Sue, back in 1931, actor Archibald Alexander Leach was headed for Hollywood. He received a screen test from Paramount Pictures, along with a five-year contract, and his first assignment was to change his name. He chose Cary from a character he played in his previous Broadway musical. Grant was selected from a list of names submitted by the film studio.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Sandy Claws

by Margot Petit Nichols

COPPER SHEA, 4, goes to Carmel Beach every day with her mom and dad, Lisa and Rick, walking on the upper pathway skirting the beach – mostly because of her penchant for benches, as her smiling countenance confirms.

On her walk, Copper hops up on each pathside bench, trots across, jumps down and continues her constitutional without breaking stride. A little added aerobic activity never hurt anyone, she told us Thursday morning when we encountered her on Scenic.

At home, Copper enjoys romps with her sister and brother, Melissa, 15, and Nick, 12; but when they're at school, Copper whiles away time in the back yard when the neighboring cat plays Taunt the Dog – smiling complacently through the back fence from the safety of her garden.

When Copper's out for a leashed walk, the ever-attentive cat strolls out to the driveway and starts the game all over again, causing Copper leash-strain and frustration – one of the vicissitudes of living in a feline-frequented neighborhood so unlike the peaceful, pooch-populated beach.

Always affable, Copper will eat almost anything that's given to her, but occasionally holds out for table food: Once she discovered a delicious-smelling foil-wrapped package on the kitchen table; excitedly opening it, she was thrilled to find warm tri-tip, which she immediately transported to the yard and buried, saving it as a savory snack for later. Thus was Dad Rick's eager plan for a tri-tip sandwich foiled when he came home for lunch from his Carmel Jewelry Studio.

Copper was given her name, by the way, because of her beautiful predominately copper and white coat.

HE UNSEEN DINNER GUEST AT THE TABLE WAS ALZHEIMER'S

THE MIDDLE-AGED woman was with an attractive r lady, obviously her mother, and while the younger of wo spoke quietly, the older woman seemed oblivious to fact that her voice was carrying across the restaurant.

looked over at their table and noticed that the mother ed four spoons full of sugar to her coffee, a vacant but ented smile on her face.

Their conversation, about a mutual friend, seemed lively, and I heard the daughter ask, "Do you remember what language he spoke?"

The mother thought a moment, then answered: "Was it chocolate?"

I turned back to my own dinner, my appetite somewhat lessened by the realization that Alzheimer's was sharing their table. Twenty minutes later I watched through the restaurant window as the two women crossed the street, and the daughter bent and kissed her mother on the cheek.

Beverly rgman

That was several years ago, but the memory stays with me. I hadn't seen many cases of Alzheimer's at that time, but today it seems not a week goes by that I don't hear of someone who is afflicted.

Sadly, I now know one of those ople. While our acquaintance is slight, it is his wife who is dear friend, and it is through her eyes that I view this sad ease. For several years she watched as her highly intelli- t husband lost his mental acuity, and she chalked it up to normal aging process.

However, last spring it became clear that he had indeed pped through the "looking-glass," and would not be urning. He had also become a danger to her, and to him- f. She placed him in a long-term care facility.

(Before I wrote that last sentence, I sat for a long while, nsidering the wording – "placed," "arranged for," "sent n to" – and the true horror of having to do such a thing to, for, one's beloved partner washed over me.)

Anna and I

"Anna" and I met about 10 years ago when I dropped in her office, and she complimented me on one of my columns. We had daughters about the same age and with the same problems, and we found ourselves smiling a lot.

"We ought to get together for coffee some day," I said. Usually, such suggestions are forgotten. But there was something about Anna that made me follow through, probably her infectious laugh, maybe her dancing green eyes, but definitely her utter lack of pretentiousness. Several weeks later I phoned and we made a date.

They say there's a "chemistry" between men and women which makes for attraction, but there must be something similar between potential friends. Anna and I hit it off right away, and though several months passed between visits, every time we got together, we just about fell off our chairs, amusing each other. No matter the subject, we always found the humor in it.

Humor is probably what's kept Anna sane these past months. Before her husband was hospitalized, and just about the time the situation was becoming undeniable, I met her one day and said, "Tell me the saddest thing and the funniest thing that's happened since our last lunch."

I've now forgotten the saddest, but I do remember that Anna laughed when she told me: "He wants me to take him home to Anna, because I'm 'mean' to him."

No doubt

Dear reader, the holiday season is upon us, and no doubt you are being solicited by every organization known to man, including the Alzheimer's Association. Their mailings frequently include a packet of note cards, and reports of promising research for a cure.

Keep the cards or give them to a thrift shop, but please write a check, however small, and think of Anna when you do.

CITY HALL CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA, CALIFORNIA

FINDINGS OF FACT.

Pursuant to Section(s) 17958.5(a) and (b) of the California Health and Safety Code, the report contained herein shall be submitted as the "Findings of Fact" document with regards to Exhibit "A" of Carmel-by-the-Sea Ordinance No. 85-13 C.S. and Exhibit "B" of Carmel-by-the-Sea Ordinance 85-21 C.S. as adopted by the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea. Under these adopting ordinances specific amendments have established which are more restrictive in nature than those sections adopted by the State of California(State Building Standards Code, and State Housing and Community Development Code) commonly referred to as Title-24 and Title-25 of the California Administrative Code.

The amendments to the Uniform Building Code, 1982 Edition (published by the International Conference of Building Officials)and amendments to the Uniform Fire Code, 1982 Edition (published by the International Conference of Building Officials as sponsored by the Western Fire Chiefs Association) have been recognized by the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea to address the Fire, Community Planning, and Building problems, concern(s) and future directions(s) by which this City can establish and maintain an environment which will afford a level of Fire and Life Safety to its citizens and guests.

Under the provisions of Section 17958.7 of the Health and Safety Code local amendments shall be based on Climatic, Geographical, or Topographical conditions. The "Findings of Facts" contained herein shall address each of these situations and shall present the local situation which either singularly or in combination cause the established amendments to be adopted.

Profile of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea:

In 1852 the northern of what is now Carmel, was owned by Monterey merchant promoter named Ecolle. He called this land "Las Manzanitas". In 1888 a developer named Duckworth, bought "Las Manzanitas", surveyed it and made a township. In 1902 Frank Devendorf and Frank Powers(a San Francisco Attorney) developed a subdivision in Las Manzanitas. Inspired by the explorer Viscaino, who in 1602, named the river and valley, they called their development Carmel Houses and Stores. In 1904 trees were planted along Ocean Avenue and the beach. In 1914 Electricity came to Carmel. In 1915 The Carmel Volunteer Fire Department was formed. And on October 31, 1916 the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea was incorporated as a General Law City.

The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea encompasses an area of one square mile or 639 acres. There are 30 miles of streets within the City. The resident population of 4,707 is added on by a significant visitor population which can exceed 45,000 on an average day. The physical location of the City is 130 miles south of San Francisco and 350 miles north of Los Angeles. Easily reached by automobile along State Highway 1 or U.S. Highway 101 (Big Sur is 26 miles south). Latitude 63 degrees 30 minutes North/Longitude 121 degrees 45'40 minutes West. Elevation of 212 feet. The City is located on the southern slope of Carmel Hill in a forested section. Pebble Beach is located to the west. Carmel Valley to its east and the Cities of Monterey, Pacific Grove,and Seaside to the north. An unincorporated area of Monterey County surrounds the City as a buffer zone.

The placement of the residential and commercial development within the City has generally adopted itself to the objectives of the City's General Plan. The forested ridges, forested canyons, and flatter areas blend in with the preamble of the City's Zoning Code that states, "The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea is hereby determined to be primarily, essentially and predominantly a residential city wherein business and commerce have in the past, are now, and are proposed to be in the future, subordinated to its residential character; and that said determination is made having in mind the history and the development of said city, its growth and the causes thereof; and also its geographical and topographical aspects, together with its near proximity to the cities of Pacific Grove and Monterey, and the businesses, industries, trades, callings and professions in existence and permissible herein!'.

The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea Community Planning, Building, and Fire Departments have established certain requirements which were developed to reduce the level of exposure to the citizens and guests of the City as well as the buildings(investments) within its boundaries. The following points were established as factors which caused concern to the Building and Fire Departments(City of Carmel-by-the-Sea) and are herein established and submitted as the "Findings of Facts".

Climatic.

The climate (weather patterns) within the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea is considered to be moderately affected by the Pacific Ocean. The weather patterns allow the year round growing seasons of vegetation. The normal year's rainfall is approximately eighteen inches on the average yearly calendar, while the summer conditions with its prevalent Pacific High Cell creates the morning and midday fog normally associated with Carmel proper. This climatic fog assists in the natural vegetation growth. During the summer months the dry winds and vegetation mix to create a hazardous fuel condition, which have caused grassland and brushland fires in past years. While normal temperatures usually do not exceed 65-80 degrees temperature during the months of (July, August, September, October) these temperatures combined can exceed 90 degrees. The afternoon winds can move a fire quickly in the hillsides and canyon areas of the City. The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea (like other California Cities) has experienced water rationing and the implementation of a water allocation system do to the drought of 1977-1978. Water shortages can be expected in future years due to storage capacities, consumption, as well as climatic conditions which reduce the already minimal annual rainfall.

Geographical.

The geographic features of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea have given residents and visitors a scenic appeal. The mountains and valleys accent one another as they surround the City. The forested areas along with the lower brushlands give a feel of balance and sort of backdrop for the City itself. These geographic features establish the roadways and building sites, as well as to create barriers for accessibility for fire suppression forces.

The forested areas of oak and pines create windbreaks from oncoming winds, while producing fuel for fires through the annual falling of leaves, dead branches, and decayed trees which drop to the ground. The dry vegetation and minimal waters available tend to create a mountainous terrain and canyon grandeur which causes concern and added fire problems. The geographical layout of the forested areas create hazardous conditions when a storm of "gale force winds" cause trees to fall onto roadways used for access by Fire Department equipment and personnel. The growing pattern and inherent nature of the Monterey Pine lends itself to being blown over easily. This due in part to the shallow root system associated with the Monterey Pine tree. The mountain on which the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea is located, has slopes in excess of 40% with overall average of 12-15% throughout(if an average slope were to be assessed). The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea has a start at~ "sealevel" and extends to areas in excess of 212 feet above sea level. The elevation change caused by the mountain creates the geographical foundation on which the City was built and will continue to build.

Seismic.

The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea has within its boundaries potentially active seismic hazards related to the "San Andreas", "San Gregorio Palo Colorado (San Gregorio-Hosgri)", "Chupines", "Navy", and "Cypress Point" faults. While systems have been developed to study and monitor the activity of earthquakes, science has not yet been able to predict(with reliability) the potential for activity on these and any active fault. Seismic activity within the City occurs yearly with little or no damage although the real potential does exist with these five "active" faults. While new construction may be limited by their respective distances to such faults, the existing structures and replacement of these structures could be serious.

Topographical.

The topographical element of this report is associated closely with the geographical element already noted. While the geographical features created the topographical conditions, the areas of findings in this section are, for the most part, caused by the construction and design of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, based on the elevation changes(sea level to 212 feet plus) as well as the slopes, draws, springs, which dissect the areas of the City.

The water supply (domestic and fire flow) system within this City is directly effected by the topographical layout of the "City of Carmel-by-the-Sea. The distribution system consists of "lift-Zones" which carry water from various dams, storage tanks, and reservoirs to the public via conduits of water pipes.

Street mains create "Lift-Zones" where pressure and the flows are adequate at the lower elevations of the zone, while minimal and sometimes critical supplies are the norm at the top (or close to the top of the lift-zones). Water supplies within the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea vary from less than 300 gallons per minute to flows in excess of 3,500 gallons per minute at 20 psi. This wide variation causes major problems to construction as well as fire suppression forces.

The roadway system outside the central business area remains technically "unpaved" to this day. The surface of these streets consists of oil mixed with the native soil and gravel, a composition that allows rain to penetrate down to the roots of the urban forest located throughout the village. The streets are narrow in width, 26 to 34 feet, with no gutters or sidewalks.

This lack of formal development of streets throughout Carmel(with the exception of some of the downtown thoroughfares) has been a conscious effort on the part of residents to maintain a "village in a forest" atmosphere. Due to traffic concentrations on many of the streets (especially the commercial downtown area) vehicles park on the roadway for loading and unloading purposes. This creates "barriers" which reduce the response time of fire equipment.

The topographical element also makes construction more restricted to the level portions (and semi-level) of the City with high concentrations of building within these areas. The respective owners are being removed and replaced with larger, more concentrated structures. Those existing structures which remain cause concern to the fire department because of their lack of adequate fire protection (firewalls, fire extinguishing systems, etc.). The exposure created by these structures does pose a separate and significant problem.

It is not uncommon, but rather the norm, to see a single or two story building torn down and replaced with a larger two story building. For practical and cost reasons these new structures are built of wood (type v)construction. The potential for conflagration exists with the buildout of the various specific areas of Carmel. The concentrated commercial, as well as residential occupancies cause concern when considering the "exposure" elements of building to building to brushland areas of this City.

The topographical nature of Carmel also lends itself to power failures caused when trees and limbs of trees tear out sections of electrical transmission lines which run throughout the City. These power failures cause the electrical pumps to become inactive and thus water supplies are interrupted. The shore line is a sandy beach used by residents and visitors alike. During most of the year there is not enough vehicular traffic at the beach to cause severe congestion; but during the summer or on sunny weekends, there is noticeably serious congestion at the western terminus of Ocean Avenue at the top of the beach. During a July 4th weekend, there may be as many as 18,000 cars a day on Ocean Avenue below San Antonio. The segment of Ocean Avenue seaward of San Antonio has had the highest number of accidents, and the highest rate of accidents per traffic volume, of all mid block locations in Carmel. The parking at the Ocean Avenue beach lot and along Scenic Road is inadequate for these peak periods and causes intrusion of beach parkers into nearby residential districts.

Lastly, while possibly not being within the "topographical" context of Findings of Fact, the historical significance of Carmel and the Carmel Mission is a major calling card. While many of the historical structures are small, some buildings are constructed closer than would be presently allowed under the "Uniform Building Codes". Construction methods are also less restrictive than would be required today. These structures and settings create "barriers" by which firefighters must work around as well as protect from exposure. These historical structures are irreplaceable. The buildings are of great historical significance to the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea and the State of California respectively. The substandard lot sizes of 4,000 square feet and high density of residential development also are factors unique to this City.

As a result of the "Findings of Fact' which identified the various "Climatic, Geographical and Topographical" elements, the requirements within the adopted Carmel-by-the-Sea Building and Fire Departments within the adopted Carmel-by-the-Sea Ordinances No. 85-13 and 85-21 C.S. are considered "REASONABLE AND NECESSARY MODIFICATIONS" to the requirements established pursuant to Section 17922 based on "Local Conditions". The City Building and Fire Departments informed its legislative body (City Council) through a comprehensive document entitled "Automatic Fire Protection Systems" for commercial buildings, Ordinance No. 326 C.S., October 8, 1974.

While it is clearly understood that the adoption of the modifications may not prevent the incidents of fire, it is further noted that with implementation these various amendments reduce the severity and potential of loss of life and property.

The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea Building and Fire Departments submit these "Findings of Fact" and request acceptance of these as defined under Section 17958.5(a) of the State of California Health and Safety Code.

C.V. Library expansion means more shelf room, new reading areas

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AFTER YEARS of making do with cramped quarters, the Carmel Valley Library just added 1,500 new square feet to its building with the help of a creative librarian and a group of tireless supporters.

Earlier this month the library opened the doors to a new nonfiction room, reference department and public meeting room. The new space also allows the librarians to combine two children's areas and move the reading room for adults to a space of its own.

The librarians hope the rearranging will better serve the younger patrons — who now have their own homework area and story time room — while providing the grown-ups with a more tranquil space to read.

And for the first time, the library staff will have its own private work room for organizational work and mending books.

"The exciting thing is this is all local," said Carmel Valley Librarian Anne Petersen Burk, explaining that the Carmel Valley Friends of the Library raised the entire $60,000 for the remodeling job.

A clean, well lighted place

The library — which has been located in the former Buckeye Restaurant Building since 1980 — was able to expand by taking over an adjoining space most recently occupied by a glass store.

Former librarian Chris Mayer came up with the idea when she found out the glass store was moving out in 1997. The Monterey County Free Libraries system — which pays for the lease, utilities, salaries and books for the CV branch — agreed to take on the additional $600 in rent per month.

The Friends group held fundraisers and picked up some grants and private donations to pay for the remodeling job.

Local contractor Steve Milne took on the job of transforming the old glass store into into well-lit library space while retaining the unique feel of the Buckeye building.

"The people have been so delighted to have a bigger library and still stay in the building we love so much," said Susan McDonald, president of the friends of the library.

The expansion project provides more shelf space for the library's 23,000 books, as well as new and reupholstered furniture, painting and carpeting.

"The book shelves were just jammed," Mayer said. The addition will allow more space for the existing collection while making room for 3,500 new books, Mayer said.

The Friends of the Library — have supported the library's projects for 23 years including the purchase of new books and raising money to keep the library open longer hours — look forward to helping out with future endeavors.

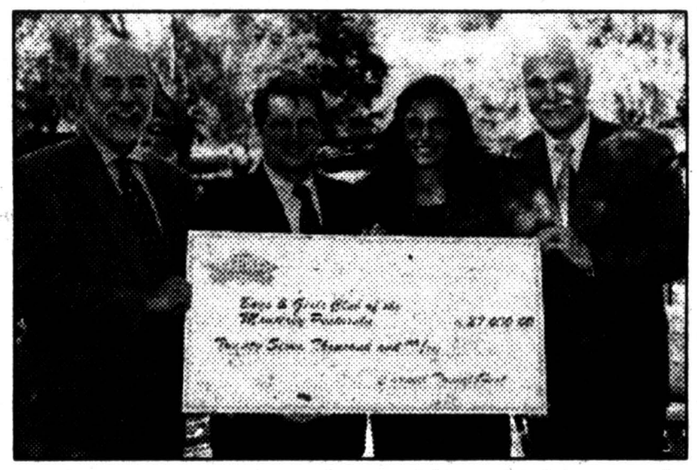
The organization is already gearing up for its annual fundraiser — a Valentine's Day dance that will be held this year at Hidden Valley Music Seminars.

Burk explained that the library hopes to expand its book collections and sponsor more programs and children's activities.

In addition, during the expansion the county provided wiring and hardware for networking 14 computers with internet access and library catalog privileges. While the library currently has four computers capable of connecting to the network, the staff hopes it will one day be able to make use of all 14 connections.

"It's very interesting that every 10 years the library goes through a growth stage," Mayer said. "The community is very adaptable at meeting its own library needs. We're well positioned for the next ten years to provide better library service."

TomatoFest assists kids



TomatoFest creator Gary Ibsen and Manfred Moennich, the new general manager of Quail Lodge Resort and Golf Club (at far left and right, respectively), presented a $27,000 check to The Boys and Girls Club of the Monterey Peninsula. This represented the proceeds from Ibsen's eighth annual Carmel TomatoFest, held at Quail Meadows at Sept. 12. Assisting in the ceremony were Quail Lodge Food and Beverage Manger Peter Hoehn and Carla Hudson, president of the board of the Boys and Girls Club.

Incredible 'live' cave a secret no more

KARCHNER CAVERNS STATE PARK OPENS TO THE PUBLIC TODAY

By KIRSTIE WILDE

STANDING INSIDE the stupendous Throne Room and gazing up at the 58-foot column known as Kubla Kahn, the Carmel visitors couldn't help but think of the subterranean explorer who first set eyes on it in 1974, and who kept his discovery a secret for more than a decade.

"We were thrilled with just the first two rooms," discoverer Randy Tufts told The Pine Cone about the day he and his spelunking college buddy Gary Tenen first dug out a small hole and crawled into Karchner Caverns, which now is part of the Arizona state park system and makes its public debut Nov. 12.

"But we kept finding more cave; the blackness just went on and on. There were no footprints, and after five hours we started to worry that we might not find our way out again," Tufts recalled.

Tufts had been in many caves before — all of them "dead" (that is, the formations were dry and no longer growing). He realized that this cave was pristine and "alive," with millions of perfect formations still growing with every drop of water in the nearly-airtight environment of 99 percent humidity. He didn't want to see it vandalized with spray paint, looted of its stalactites and crystals and ruined by exposure to the dry desert air outside.

On one of his many explorations inside Karchner caverns, discoverer Randy Tufts stumbled upon the bones of a giant Shasta ground sloth (above) which died in the cavern some 80,000 years ago.

His devotion — and remarkable ability to keep his mouth shut until he enlisted the cooperation of the landowner and the state of Arizona 14 years later — has resulted in a tourist experience unlike anything this reporter has seen, or heard of.

Airlocks and hairy sloths

The 550-acre Karchner Caverns State Park is remarkably accessible — one of the reasons Tufts was so worried about vandalism in the beginning — about 45 minutes by east of the Tucson, Arizona, international airport on Interstate 10.

The cave tour begins with an electric tram ride from the Discovery Center, which features interactive exhibits, a film about the cave's discovery and the bones of a giant hairy ground sloth found during construction

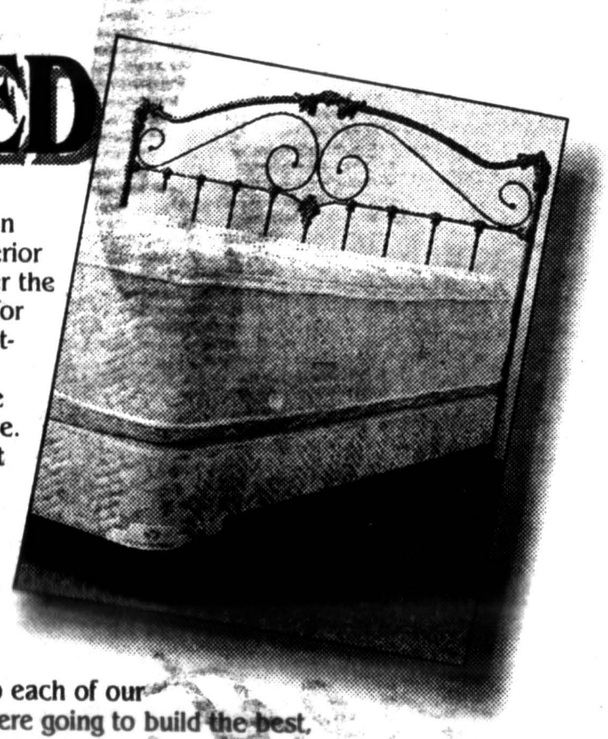
Sleep on the World's Most Luxurious Bed...
the New SUPERBED



Monterey Mattress Company began with a commitment to building superior mattresses at affordable prices. Over the years we have earned a reputation for quality and service like no other mattress company, large or small. Our beds have always been known to be sensible, supportive and comfortable. No gimmicks, no frills...just the right stuff.

Well, neighbors, after much thought, we came to the conclusion that a few frills wouldn't hurt. After a year of research and development, we have designed, and are now building what may be the most luxurious bed in the world. I went to each of our suppliers and asked them, "If you were going to build the best, most luxurious bed in the world, what materials, regardless of cost, would you use?" Well, they told me, and the result of these recommendations were given to master builders, Dale Gingerich and John Babine.

They then proceeded to experiment with various combinations until they came up with, what we affectionately call our "Superbed".

How Dale and John managed to build a cloud with comfort and superior support out of earthly materials is a minor miracle! But they did...and then they rested. For the rest of your life, come into the showroom or factory and test-rest your way into our heavenly, brand new, dream machine, "The Superbed!"

of the cavern's walkways. Groups of about 20 visitors are led through three airtight chambers enclosed by four big steel refrigerator doors that keep the eight percent humidity and 90-degree heat of the desert air away from the cave's moist environment. Walking through these airlocks helps visitors adjust to the soft (and dramatic) lighting, the cool 68-degree temperature, and the damp, earthy smell.

There are formations in Karchner not found anywhere else on earth. On the quarter-mile tour, visitors pass through two caverns the size of football fields. In the Rotunda, slender "soda straw" formations hang from the ceiling. These delicate, hollow stalactites are only about 1/4 inch thick. The longest one in Karchner hangs an incredible 21 feet from the ceiling. Over 30 types of formations, including stalactites, stalagmites, flowstone, helictites, the colorful "fried eggs and bacon," draperies, boxwork, shields, turnips and "moon milk" are found. The centerpiece in the Throne Room is Kubla Kahn, the tallest known column in Arizona, measuring 58 feet high.

Karchner Caverns is also the summer migratory and maternity home for about 1,000 cave bats, which arrive from their winter range in Mexico in May, have their babies in June and fly away by mid-September. The smell of their guano wafting through that fist-sized hole in 1974 was the original clue that beckoned Randy Tufts into this subterranean Xanadu.

The bad news

Twenty-five years later, and with $27 million invested by the citizens of Arizona, Karchner Caverns State Park intrigued thousands of would-be visitors before it even opened its big refrigerator doors. According to Ellen Bonnin-Bilbrey, public information officer for the park, they had 40,000 advance reservations as of Nov. 11.

"We've had more than 10,000 calls per day, which threatened to shut down the entire phone system in Benson [Arizona]," Bilbrey said Thursday. The cave is totally booked through 1999, and there are just a few spaces left in January and February.

"But we have 110,000 slots available in the year 2000, and we are encouraging people to book up to a year in advance," she said.

Tours are priced at $12 for adults, $4 for children 7-13 and free for those aged 6 and under. Admission to the park is an additional $10 per car. Call (520) 586-CAVE for reservations. But don't be surprised if you get a busy signal.

Trees along Highway 1 will make way for power lines

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE MONTEREY County Planning Commission agreed that PG&E's safety concerns are compelling enough to warrant the removal of 27 Monterey pine trees near Carpenter Street along Highway 1.

Voting 8 to 1, with Commissioner Carol Lacy dissenting, the commission granted a permit Oct. 27 for the removal of 97 pines, which included retroactive approval for 58 trees that were cut down a year ago.

"I see no sneaky or malevolent intent on the part of PG&E," said Commissioner Sharon Parsons. "Civilization's needs and environmental concerns have hit head-on. PG&E needs to do what they have done" to keep the power on, she said.

"We're at the point where we want the lights to go on and stay on during storms," agreed Commissioner Lawrence Hawkins.

PG&E's larger plan included the removal of approximately 1,100 trees — most of which are not in the coastal zone and don't require permits for removal — in the areas surrounding the 60-kilovolt line near Aguajito Road and Viejo Road.

The planning commission's decision allows PG&E to remove the remaining 39 trees in the Caltrans right of way along Highway 1 between Carpenter Street and Viejo Way. (PG&E representatives explained that the company only needs to take out 28 trees, since several have died in the last year.)

The commission also beefed up the revegetation plan for the area based on recommendations made by Commissioner Scott Hennessy.

"The exotic weed species on site could preclude success of the revegetation plan," Hennessy said. He suggested a

Friends of Point Sur lighthouse rally to its rescue

People and Places

By Sissi Maleki

IT SEEMS like yesterday that I felt the shock of being called "that woman" by my girlfriend's toddler. My brain had momentarily resisted believing that she was pointing at me. Until then, I had considered myself a "girl."

I went through another rough mental adjustment not too long ago when reading an article that combined "the baby-boomer generation" and "the graying of America" in the same paragraph. Again, my brain tried to convince itself that there was a non sequitur there. But to no avail. Facts were facts. I was part of the graying of America.

But "graying" is still a hard thing to swallow, as I saw when my college mate recently came for a visit.

In the midst of catching up with all the I-heard's and did-you-know's she stopped, held her breath and blurted out, "I've got to tell you something." I braced myself for news of an impending divorce, or worse.

She continued in a hushed whisper, "I've had to buy reading glasses . . . you wanna see them?"

My eyes widened. I nodded. She furtively pulled them out and showed them to me. I could feel her need to have me say how cool they were.

But I just couldn't do it.

Not because I didn't admire her designer reading glasses, but because part of me — the honest part of me — wanted to confess that I, too, was about to consider a pair. I, too, had recently been struggling to make out my own chicken-scratch notes. But the confession stuck in my throat.

The moment passed and I cowardly remained silent.

OK, so I'll tell her the next time she visits . . . .

THE MONTEREY MARITIME Museum was quite appropriately the site for "A Night for the Light," a Nov. 6th fundraiser for the Point Sur lighthouse. Supporters, docents and other volunteers gathered to nibble, drink and listen (especially to music provided by our own local pianist Jonathon Lee).

Reportedly John & Carol O'Neil, long active in the group, got Mary Jane & Jack Hammerland caught up in the excitement of the cause. (The historic Point Sur Lightstation is in desperate need of restoration.)

Rumor had it that Mary Jane decided to attack the fundraising project like a private party and had hit on friends from every conceivable social enclave. And as she herself admitted, there was quite a bit of "arm-twisting" here and there. Her hubby Jack affectionately said of her, "she's like a cyclone full of zest and vitality; when she gets with a program, there's no holding her back!"

Married to her 44 years, he should know. What's his secret? "I compromise!" Actually, looking at them you can't help notice what a handsome couple they are . . .

Dick & Nancy Burns were getting into the swing of social life down here after their annual stay at their place in Tahoe. Turns out the house up there is located right on the ninth hole of the Old Brockway golf course, which was where the old original Crosby tourney began. Most amusing was hearing about "the loop" — holes 1, 2, 3, 8 and 9, named for how Dean Martin would get totally "looped" playing them.

The Burns also ran into a number of old neighbors from their days in Piedmont ("the white ghetto next to Oakland"). The reality was, they were all good friends of the Hammerlands and it would have been easier to resist a shotgun than Mary Jane.

Same thing went for Dick Morrall, neighbors to the Hammerlands, and very effectively persuaded by them of the worthiness of the cause. Dick, keeping company with Gloria Costa, confessed he hadn't tried the climb up to the lighthouse yet.

Virginia Macleod was another to be "persuaded" by the Hammerlands, though again, she too had never made the real climb. Blanche Soderman tried to claim advanced age as the excuse for not having done so. Looking at her, I suspected it was a lousy excuse. Both were enchanted by the Otter Limits Barbershop Quartet's performance that evening and Virginia admitted she would've shown up that evening just to hear them.

Brad Harlan, catching up with friends, admitted that ever since he quit being a docent for Point Sur, he's gained weight he could've done without. . . . (OK, another item on my list of to-do's: Become a lighthouse docent on the double!)

Mary Margaret Graham was seen with her beau, Bill Wallace. Joyce Newell, squired by Darnell Whitt (certainly a man about town these days!) was wearing a smashingly elegant coat dress. I keep meaning to ask her how she keeps that figure . . .

Boonie Covell is a passionate lighthouse docent — as all are. Listening to her really made you want to head straight there: "When I go to that special place, I return revitalized . . . it's a magical place for me and it's so much fun to share . . . ." By the way, for the evening Boonie had ordered her hubby George to sit and stay out of her way at the event. It's amazing how deceptively docile husbands can appear in public.

The Holman Ranch was the setting for the Nov. 7th party organized by the Special Olympics Monterey Bay Region, which provides local sports training and competition for those with developmental disabilities.

It was a dedicated bunch of people, many of whom had been won over by the cause quickly after they volunteered.

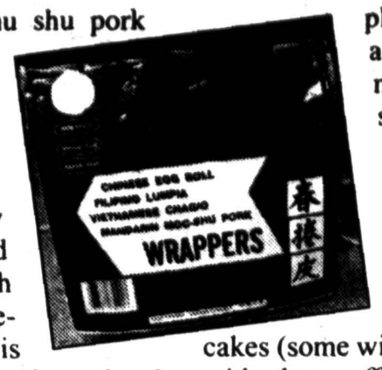
Mystery of the elastic po-pings uncovered. . .

à la carte

By MORGAN

THE ASSIGNMENT was this: Discover the secret behind delicious, stretchy pancakes that are wrapped around mu shu pork in Chinese restaurants. Why are some stretchy and others not?

Thinking to blow the lid off the whole inscrutable Chinese mu shu pancake story, we went, undercover, to four local Chinese restaurants and found their mu shu dishes to be unique to each eatery — undoubtedly expressing the individual chef's own preference of pancake production and filling.



The pancakes in which mu shu pork stuffing is wrapped are not called mu shu pancakes, but po-ping, or Mandarin pancakes. In Chinese, mu shu means yellow cassia blossoms, and we have no idea why any mu shu dish would be called that. Mu shu pork is served with hoisin sauce, which is sometimes called plum sauce, but is plum-less. Authentic plum sauce is made of plums, apricots, chili, vinegar and sugar. Hoisin sauce is made of soybeans, flour, sugar, water, spices, garlic and chili. What can we tell you?

Each of the restaurants visited served eye-appealing, tasty pork-and-vegetable-filled Mandarin pancakes (some with far more pork than others), with three offering pancakes that seemed like very, very thin, pliable flour tortillas. The fourth served a remarkably thin pancake through which one could read a newspaper — if one were inclined to such whimsy — but with a unique stretchy quality. We found these to be the ultimate in po-pings — pleasant to hold, pleasant to bite into.

Besides shredded pork, the Mandarin pancakes we sampled in the four restaurants generally contained shredded cabbage, green onions, bamboo shoots and scrambled eggs. Some contained shredded carrots, bean sprouts and even black mushrooms.

In three of the restaurants, large round pancakes were brought to the table on a plate separate from the pork and vegetable melange, and with a small dish of hoisin sauce. The server then spread a little of the sauce on the pancake with the back of a spoon, then filled it — one pancake at a time — with the vegetable/pork mixture, folding the pancake sides inward gracefully, using only chopsticks, to form a neat package — a little at-table ceremony that was a pleasure to watch. Some servers left one side of the pancake open. The fourth restaurant served only two pancakes, with the stuffing already inside, folded crêpes-style (open at both ends). One pancake was white, the other yellow. (Could this be where the yellow cassia blossom comes in?)

Although an inveterate reporter/interviewer, this columnist does not speak Chinese and found it difficult to break the language barrier sufficiently at the restaurants to learn their secrets; there was a noted proclivity among restaurant servers to deter us from interviewing chefs or kitchen helpers. The inscrutable Chinese mu shu/po-ping pancake investigation became ever more inscrutable, restaurant to restaurant.

Making po-ping from scratch

Generally speaking, po-ping pancakes are made with white flour and boiling water mixed and kneaded into a dough, which is covered and allowed to rise, then separated and rolled into "snakes." These are pinched off in one-inch increments, palmed into balls, then rolled out into thin rounds about three inches in diameter. Half the rounds are brushed with sesame seed oil, and the other half laid on top of the oiled pancakes so that one ends up with a number of pancakes two pancakes thick. Each double-thick pancake is then rolled out to about seven or eight inches in diameter. Each set is cooked in a heavy, hot, unoiled frying pan for about one minute on each side. As each pancake is finished, the two halves are gently separated and stacked on a plate and served immediately.

We asked the server at the stretch pancake restaurant if they made the pancakes or purchased them ready made. We were told sometime they were home made, sometimes bought. Did the pancakes contain egg

Carmel Music Society continues 73rd season with violinist Hilary Hahn, 19

She is a SONY Classical recording star, maintains her own website that documents her international travels and is a guest artist in the subscription concerts of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center. And violinist Hilary Hahn is a mere 19.

She will perform at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 16, at the Sunset Center as the Carmel Music Society continues its 73rd season. Tickets are $30, $25 and $15, and Ms. Hahn will be available to sign autographs after the performance. Call 625-9938 for ticket information.

The Carmel Music Society presents Hilary Hahn, violinist, in concert this Tuesday, Nov. 16.

Ms. Hahn has already established herself as one of the most accomplished and compelling artists on the international concert circuit. Admitted to Philadelphia's Curtis Institute of Music at the age of 10, Hilary Hahn made her major-orchestra debut a year-and-a-half later with the Baltimore Symphony. She studied at Curtis with the legendary Jascha Brodsky.

In 1996, Ms. Hahn completed the formal requirements for her bachelor of music degree at Curtis and made her Carnegie Hall debut in New York as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

For her Carmel appearance, Ms. Hahn will be accompanied by pianist Natalie Zhu. The program is scheduled to include works by Brahns, J. S. Bach and Debussy.

Miss Zhu began her piano studies at age 6 in her native China and gave her first public performance at age 9 in Beijing. When she was 11, she immigrated with her family to Los Angeles.

EDGE-OF-SEAT SUSPENSE IN AN OFFBEAT, STRONG PLAY

By PATRICK WHITEHURST

AFTER THE performance, as we were leaving the Magic Circle Theater, I observed to my companion, "The audience seems unusually quiet tonight." She responded, "I think 'stunned' would be a better description." And she would be right.

Lyle Kessler's "Orphans," a two-act play set in Philadelphia, is the kind of story that comes to the stage far too rarely. If this is the type of theater fare that director Elsa Con has in store for us in her new Magic Circle Center for the Arts, we look forward to seeing more of her productions. Both "Orphans" and "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," the theater's premier offering, are just a tad offbeat in theme. Both are studies of the darker side of life. Both — perhaps unconsciously — display an inner depth of human relationships that Elsa Con's training as a clinical psychologist is able to bring out in her actors' performances.

THEATER REVIEW

"Orphans" is a play that one takes home and talks about. And the three actors who comprise the show's entire cast are noteworthy for their fine performances. Christopher J. Anderson as Treat, the older brother, and timothy paul (that's right, he prefers his name spelled without capital letters), the younger, intellectually challenged brother Phillip, and the mysterious and enigmatic Harold, played superbly by Michael Robbins, were all orphaned in childhood — about the only thing they seem to have in common.

Treat is a loud-mouth, pretentious, small-time crook and hold-up man who keeps himself and his retarded brother, Phillip, one step ahead of destitution with his nefarious occupation. He brings home the older, drunken, well-heeled Harold and decides to kidnap him and hold him for ransom. Thus begins an unusual (to say the least) relationship between Harold and the two bothers, which reveals Treat's subconscious dependency on his younger brother, to whom he is almost pathologically abusive.

The psychology here becomes somewhat convoluted as Harold, acting as almost a father figure to both boys, leads Phillip out of the shell that Treat has fabricated to keep him dependent. Then, after befriending the two brothers, Harold forces Treat to recognize who and what he really is: a "Dead End Kid" and more of a delinquent than a professional crook.

Man of mystery

Harold is a man of mystery from Chicago whose business we never learn, except that he is affluent, knows the ways of the underworld, and is involved with some unsavory characters from whom he is running. Believe it or not, this all seems very logical.

For a play with such a humorless scenario, there is great humor throughout, especially between Harold and the brothers. There is also great pathos, and one of the best choreographed, realistic fight scenes I have seen on stage in a long time. The play keeps one anxious, focused, and at times, on the edge of our seats. The action takes place in a single setting that changes character between the first and second acts as Treat and Phillip change character.

I don't want to give the plot away, but watch Harold's eyes in the final scene.

Elsa Con's production of "Orphans" is a well constructed, directed and acted play.

PEOPLE

this group by volunteering 15 years ago. "It just touches your heart forever."

New CHOMP President Steve Packer and his wife Ann were keeping Jean Horan company while her hubby Larry bustled about in his role as event chair. Chatting with Steve, I discovered he went from practicing medicine to administrative work. I asked, "Wasn't that rather masochistic of you?" I did get a laugh from him, but I pressed on. "You do know, of course, that your predecessor [Jay Hudson] left with a lot of white hair . . ." At that he really cracked up, and replied, indicating his slightly balding head, "I'll settle for any hair remaining!"

Sherri McCullough was hubby-less this day as Tom McCullough had gone off to attend the memorial for long-time local resident Rody Holt.

Attorney Larry Horan, who at one time had partnered with the late Fred Farr, revealed that he first got involved with the Special Olympics by request of his friend Sargent Shriver long ago. He remained committed to the cause, not surprisingly.

Jean Hurd, one of the event committee members, managed to absent herself by going out of town, even though she had gotten a number of her friends to attend, like Mary Margaret Fleming, Gene Glaser and Liz Butterworth.

All in all, a good gathering . . .

■ Carmel Heritage offers a peek into our local inns

Dealing with history is usually not a "practical" thing . . . it's more of an "education."

But leave it to Carmel Heritage Society to turn the tables and make this year's featured tour a highly practical one: "Inns of Distinction Tour" on Nov. 7th gave everyone a chance to see 12 Carmel inns for their own future use or the use of future guests. (Boy, do we need the latter around here!)

Vikki Logan was really enthused about the tour: "It's like a great big block party, running into everyone you know!" She added, "Now I know where to put my grandkids next time." Evelyn Vitarisi, touring with hubby Peter, agreed. "Now I know a place for my sister!"

About the only thing that wasn't practical, though, was the storm outburst that drenched even those with umbrellas. Hapless umbrella owners, like Peter, found themselves attacked from all sides by those seeking shelter. Cappy Martin, a shrewd fox, had come touring with two umbrellas. But he still managed to get wet. Francesca Hawthorne's fashionable umbrella blew inside-out!

Amy Anderson & George Somero escaped from the downpour at the Briarwood Inn by firmly ensconcing themselves on a sofa and greeting friends as they passed through. Denise Cozzens, with feet so soaked they were squishing, comforted herself with the hors d'oeuvres and wine found at each inn. So, too, did Jeannie Walker, with hair still dripping over her forehead. "We're lovin' the food!" Jeannie said between bites. Even Joe & Mary Ann Ford insisted that their "spirits were not dampened by the rain!"

Local poets read from their chapbook

FOR THE FIFTH year, these three local published poets have united their voices in a common theme during evening readings at The Carl Cherry Center in Carmel. Bonnie Gartshore reads from the latest chapbook, "Women's Voices: Essential Transformations," as Jennifer Lagier (left) and Laura Bayless listen in front of the Cherry Center art gallery fireplace. This will be the intimate venue of the upcoming reading at 7:30 p.m., Friday, Nov. 19. Guitarist Jeanne McCombs' background music will interweave with the poetry to form the program which will benefit the center. Tickets are $8, and reservations are recommended by calling 624-7491. Chapbooks will be available at a nominal cost.

Cartoonist Bill Bates speaks

CARMEL'S ARTIST, cartoonist and caricaturist Bill Bates will be the featured speaker at the Carmel Residents Association's meeting, starting at 4:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 18 in the Vista Lobos meeting room, Torres between Third and Fourth, Carmel.

His topic will be "Capturing Carmel and a Few Ports Along the Way."

A LA CARTE

(thinking, perhaps eggs added the stretchy quality)? Sometimes, we were told. We did learn that they steam the pancakes, rather than cook them in hot pans. Inscrutableness persisted.

Ready-made wrappers

If the restaurant sometimes purchased ready-made po-pings, we thought, we can, too, and searched out "non-stick, whole egg, paper thin wrappers" in an Asian market. Although billed as All Purpose Menlo "Mandarin Moc-Shu Pork Wrappers" on the label (why Moc-Shu and not Mu-Shu?), they also are identified as wrappers for Filipino lumpia, Vietnamese chagio and Chinese egg rolls, which, of course, are filled and then deep fried.

We tried heating a wrapper, 8-by-8 inches square, in a hot pan; it turned crisp and unfoldable; we steamed one and it turned into something akin to parchment paper. But taken from the package as is, the wrappers look like, taste like and stretch like the mystery po-pings we so enjoyed — except they are square, not round. Besides water and flour, eggs are listed in the panel of ingredients. Ah so!

We contacted the manufacturer, Menlo Food Corporation in Palo Alto, to ask if the wrappers can be eaten that way, straight from the package. We were told absolutely, yes. The wrappers should be at room temperature when filled with the warm pork and vegetables, which in turn, warm the wrappers. A Menlo Food Corporation representative told us exactly what we had found out through experimenting: If you try to reheat the wrappers, they become too tough or crisp.

The reason Menlo wrappers are "elastic" is that in the processing, "heat makes the protein cross link." They become even more elastic if you put them in a microwave for just a few seconds, we were informed. "You'll have to experiment with your own microwave," the rep said.

Local restaurants in which we enjoyed mu shu pork in its various forms were: The China Gourmet and Tommy's Wok, both Carmel; Chef Lee's, Monterey; and the stretchy mu shu pork pancakes were from China Garden, Pacific Grove.

PLACES

Chris Sidner, wine glass in hand at her volunteer post at the Pine Inn, was still drooling over La Playa's log cabin, which she called "rustic elegant."

Mary Condry, having done some volunteer duty at the inns for the Society, was determined to see the tour for herself. Still dripping from the rain, she shrugged off the lousy weather pointing out, "It just makes it more memorable!"

Judging from most enthusiastic comments, I think she was right . . .

■ Dominoes tournament kicks off with party

For the 36th annual Dominoes International Tournament, a party at a superb Carmel Meadows house kicked off the event.

My source (aka Jane Roland) told me the island-style home, owned by Barbara & Stanley Yeomans, not only has a spectacular view of the ocean, but it has a kind of funicular to descend from the ground level to the much lower living room.

Some of those who attended included Rod & Sue Dewar, Jeff & Caroline Craig, Jean Craemer, and the Alliance on Aging's Executive Director Bruce Hamilton. (Proceeds from the tourney were benefiting the group.)

Also present were Joe & June LaMantia. Joe was tournament chairman, though he doesn't play himself. Jane's hubby John was the tourney's director . . .

Glimpse of Russian-speaking community in Maine resembles exotic photo album

THE FACE that graces the cover of Robert S. Jaster's book, "Russian Voices on the Kennebec," could be that of a latter-day movie star: a Janet Leigh in Russian garb, perhaps. But it is Alexandra Sherbakoff as a Georgian folk dancer.

Alexandra Sherbakoff, who emigrated to the United States in 1948, is one of many Russians who followed earlier émigrés to the Kennebec Valley, Maine; it was eventually to become the largest Russian-speaking rural community in this country.

This was a subject of which I knew nothing before reading the book. The only Russian community I had encountered here was in Calistoga, in the Napa Valley — which also seems an unlikely place for Russians to adopt, but where they established their own Russian Orthodox Church and continued the traditions of the old country.

Jaster, who lives in Carmel, is a graduate of Columbia University's Russian Institute, and over the years has written on Soviet foreign policy in various journals. To research this book, he moved to Maine where he conducted interviews with many diverse Russian-speaking émigrés who had settled in Kennebec Valley, coming at different times in this century: veterans of the White Russian Army of the 1920s; some from the Ukraine, others were Belorussians; those who escaped during WWII in the early '40s, and those who came later — all from different walks of life. All combined to form an historically unique colony.

Jaster sets before his readers individual and personal stories of immigrants of diverse backgrounds and talents who remade their lives in the United States. A number of black and white photographs illustrate the text, each with the charm of an exotic family photo album.

Years of research have gone into this well-written and readable book, published recently in softcover by The University of Maine Press, Orono, Maine. It is available at The Thunderbird Bookshop, The Barnyard Shopping Village, Carmel.

Jaster's previous books include "South Africa's Other Whites: Voices for Change," published in 1993, based on interviews with anti-apartheid activists, written with Shirley Kew Jaster.

AIRFIELD

fies the airfield as a nonconforming use, also states that the airfield is 'an acceptable use,'" he said.

Robles del Rio resident Don Soule — a retired pilot who kept a plane at the airport for eight years and flew in and out of it for 12 — said the airport must stay because it provides safety to Village residents.

"If that fire [the recent Tassajara Fire] had had a Santa Ana wind to blow it, we couldn't have gotten out without a helicopter to evacuate us," he said. Helicopters used the airport for refueling during the firefighting efforts, according to Soule. "There's no other place where a helicopter could land in town."

Saving the trees

According to Bauman, the county will try to get a waiver from the Public Utilities Commission or Caltrans to let the trees stay. Otherwise, a review of the environmental impact of removing the oak trees — which are protected by the county code — will have to be completed.

De Jounge, who has a 99-year lease from owners Peter and May Delfino to run the airport, said the trees need to go since the airport was built before they were ever planted.

"The trees were not there from the beginning and ought not to be there," he said. "A lot of trees have been taken down by property owners who want to see the airport remain safe." Also, removing the trees will improve their view, he maintained.

Cutting the trees and grinding down the stumps would cost the county about $10,000, Bauman said.

County supervisors want to hear what Village residents have to say about the issue, and will hold a public forum before it comes back to the board of supervisors. A meeting scheduled for Nov. 15 was postponed by Potter, who said he needed time to publicize it. A new date has not been announced.

weed containment plan for such invasive species as genista, pampas grass and hemlock.

Some neighbors in the area, who said they had been outraged when PG&E's contractor had removed 58 trees in the coastal zone without a permit a year ago, urged the planning commission to protect the remaining trees.

"It was a year ago this weekend when I heard the sound of wood being ground and heavy equipment in the forest," said Joseph Ferry. "I was amazed that something like this could happen on the Monterey Peninsula."

"Giving them a retroactive permit is rewarding them for doing something illegal," said resident Beth Weissman.

PG&E representatives apologized for last year's unauthorized tree removal, explaining that it had resulted from a miscommunication between the company and its contractor.

"It was nearly a year ago on Nov. 3 that we went to the last [inspection] stop of the day," said Marvin Penner, resource manager for PG&E. "Going to the field and what we saw raised my blood pressure considerably."

After the severe storms and lengthy power outages of 1998, PG&E came up with a plan to remove 300 Monterey pines from the coastal zone.

(Ninety-seven of those trees with trunks larger than 12 inches would require permits.)

In July 1998, Monterey County granted PG&E a "waiver" permit to remove 14 trees — which posed too great a hazard to wait for the regular approval process — said Eileen Goodwin of PG&E.

Instead, the contractor removed 56 trees not covered by the waiver.

"Although it is difficult to forgive, the sheer number of trees involved in the project made it difficult for the contractor to keep the permit-covered trees separate from the non-permit trees in process," Goodwin said. "Steps have been taken to make sure that type of confusion is not able to happen again."

While some commissioners were concerned that PG&E had been negligent in its pruning of the trees growing near the utility poles, the company's representatives assured them that PG&E had been routinely trimming the trees.

Night work rescheduled on Highway 1

CONSTRUCTION CREWS will be resurfacing Highway 1 between Carmel Valley Road and Morse Drive from 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 16-17.

While nearby residents may be annoyed by the noise, Caltrans says night work is the only option, considering the traffic congestion on the highway during the day. Traffic controls with a pilot car will be in effect during construction; no detour is available.

OPINION

Editorial

Where are the lifeguards?

THE LETTER received at the Pine Cone made an impassioned plea for lifeguards at Carmel beaches, where the life of one young person had just been lost to the waves and two others had nearly been taken.

"A slight increase in the county tax rate is the merest detail as compared with the preservation of the lives of our young people who will carry on when we are gone," said the eight residents of Carmel Highlands who signed the heartfelt letter — printed in this newspaper in July 1939.

Sixty years later, tax revenues have increased to an extent that could hardly have been imagined by the concerned citizens of the 1930s. The population of Monterey County has gone way up and the number of people drawn to our oceanfront has gone up even more. But we still have no lifeguards.

It's not just the people who live here who sometimes need to be rescued from the beguiling — and hazardous — Pacific Ocean. Over the last several decades the California seashore has become an international obsession that lures millions, many of whom are completely unaware of the danger posed by the magnificent, crashing waves they love to ponder. The danger of the sea, in fact, is just about the only thing that hasn't changed in these parts since 17-year-old William Vaughn of Oakland drowned at the South end of Carmel beach on July 8, 1939.

"Beach Tragedy Shocks Village," said a very ominous headline in The Pine Cone that week.

In the intervening half-century, dozens of people have died in the Pacific Ocean off Monterey County beaches. Earlier this month, the sea took its most recent victim — a vibrant, young woman who was innocently honeymooning in Pacific Grove. Her death may have been unavoidable because of the mighty waves that knocked her into the ocean. But it focuses attention on the bigger issue of ocean safety for everyone who visits Monterey County's shore.

Carmel's police officers and firemen will rescue you if your house is on fire or if you are being robbed, but they won't enter the water to help a swimmer or SCUBA diver in distress. Instead, they rely on Monterey County's very competent array of rescue services which respond to nearly any ocean emergency. Unfortunately, because of the distances they must travel, those rescuers often arrive too late. Not a single lifeguard is posted on Carmel Beach or Monastery Beach or at any of the other very popular beaches in Monterey County — not even on Memorial Day or Labor Day weekend.

This strange situation makes us wonder if local government has lost sight of its founding purpose: to protect its citizens. These days, enforcing the zoning code gets top priority at city hall. We think the safety of a swimmer, or a toddler playing in the surf, is also important.

Council should respect neighborhood

Dear Editor:

We are writing in regard to the Flanders Foundation proposal for the Flanders Mansion

We have lived on Hatton Road more than thirty years and this is where we have raised our children and now are welcoming our children and grandchildren home for visits. This is an area of families who, more often than not, live here for the majority of their lifetime. It is a wonderful old residential neighborhood.

In their official 501-C application to the State of California, the Flanders Foundation has listed under the section for "On-going Maintenance and Operations" the following uses: "1) Establish an endowment with income from: Office space rentals, Weddings, receptions, and luncheon fees, Executive retreats/luncheons/dinner meetings — rental fee (We see substantial income from this source). Recital fees." All of the above in quotation marks is exactly as written in their application.

These commercial activities are totally incompatible with a residential neighborhood. Introducing such commercial development into an old residential neighborhood is destructive to our neighborhood and runs counter to what Carmel stands for — placing residential neighborhood preservation as its highest priority.

We hope the city council will consider our neighborhood with the same regard they hold for their own neighborhoods. We have participated with our time, energy and resources in many city projects and other Carmel organizations. We have always considered ourselves Carmel residents and hope

Selling Flanders 'short-sighted'

Dear Editor:

This letter is written in strong support for the preservation of the Flanders Mansion, part of the Mission Trails Preserve, in the public ownership for the community now and in the future to use and enjoy. As a Carmel homeowner, living about a mile from the Flanders Mansion for the past 10 years, I know this property well. What a gloriously serene place to visit. Most communities would envy this preserve and the house. I cannot believe that the City of Carmel would try to balance its budget by selling off valuable historical resources to fund other city projects. This approach seems so short-sighted.

If the city truly has budgetary concerns, selling off valuable property is not the answer to financial stability, I hope the city will think again and work with the Flanders Foundation to save our precious community assets. They help make Carmel the very special place it is.

Native pine forest deserves protection

Dear Editor:

In the interest of full disclosure, the meeting of scientists described in a front-page article Oct. 1 and in a letter from Bruce Cowan Oct. 8 was composed of present and past consultants and researchers for Pebble Beach Co. It should not be seen as representative of the scientific community or forest professionals.

It is unfortunate that the claim that the petition to list the Monterey pine as a Threatened Species would "impede research" was not balanced by scientists who support the listing and understand that it will benefit research by those concerned about survival of the native pine habitat. There is a big difference between research to understand and protect a species and research to facilitate its removal.

There are two great threats to the native forest: clearing for development and the pitch canker epidemic. Regarding pitch canker, virtually all of the research is aimed at slowing the spread of the disease and finding a resistant tree that can be cloned for landscaping purposes. Even the scientists involved in this work admit that clones should be used only in the urban forest, and should not be planted in the large remaining tracts of native forest. It is the survival of this forest — the native, undeveloped forest — with its unique understory of special plants and animals, that deserves the highest priority for preservation.

Listing the tree is expected to spur research on the native pine forest itself — to fund ecological studies to learn how the large healthy stands have been able to resist the disease, while those already fragmented and subject to weakening stresses are being rapidly destroyed. In the meantime, every effort should be made to preserve the diverse native forests that have the best chance to survive the epidemic.

Aldo Leopold said it so well: "The first rule of intelligent tinkering is to save all the pieces."

Why Carmel is under scrutiny

Dear Editor:

It's easy to see why the California Coastal Commission is concerned about Carmel.

1. Outstanding tardiness.

Carmel was to comply with the coastal act and work was to be completed in 1978, '79, '80, '81. The deadline was 1981 for the Local Coastal Program.

2. Scofflawness

Carmel balked and refused to comply. 20 years of procrastination.

3. McMansion acceptance

Carmel's character is (has been) destroyed as houses on steroids replace cottages.

Why does staff and council have trouble understanding why Carmel is under scrutiny? It's easy to understand.

Nancy Iverson,
Carmel

LCP will help property owners

Dear Editor:

It makes me laugh to hear "environmentalists" (including the Coastal Commission) chiding the City of Carmel for still not having completed its local coastal plan.

The LCP has never been finished because completing it will make getting a building permit easier, not harder. Environmentalists like more regulation, not less. They went to a lot of trouble to invent the drawn-out, labyrinthine permit process that has swallowed California whole and don't see any advantage in removing a step. A finished LCP will give Carmel the power to issue coastal development permits, making a trip to the coastal commission unnecessary for most applicants. Is it any wonder why Carmel, like Pacific Grove, hasn't done a thing for the benefit of individual property owners?

Benjamin Allred,
Carmel

INTERSECTION

and Second intersection and move all the school crossings to coincide with the stop signs.

Some locals are also worried about the Junipero and Seventh intersection, where several port-a-potties are blocking the view for people trying to turn onto Junipero. The port-a-potties will only be there temporarily while the restrooms at Carmel Plaza are being remodeled.

The city will consider changes to the intersection of Dolores and Eighth, Cullem said.

"The Carmel Foundation is expanding and adding a handicapped ramp on the corner," Cullem explained. "We'll have more elderly citizens accessing that intersection. We're giving serious consideration about whether that should be made a four-way stop."

below the poverty line if its income was less than $15,150 — a figure which the agency said was the same throughout the United States, without regard for local costs of living.

The true Monterey County poverty level is probably much higher, said Leslie Sunny, an official with the local food bank.

"This is a very expensive area and a lot of couples or single mothers with one or two children and minimum wage jobs have to pay the rent and they find themselves not having enough food," Sunny said.

But though the poverty figures may be too low for local living costs, they also leave out many types of income and assistance available to the poor.

According to the census bureau, a family's "income" includes wages and cash government benefits like social security, welfare, disability, unemployment insurance and the like.

It does not include: food stamps, subsidized housing, MediCal benefits, or private charity. It also does not count the value of a person's home, or any capital gains they may have received.

"That means a person living in an ocean-front home in Carmel with a ton of stocks but whose only cash income is Social Security could be counted as living below the poverty line," one official familiar with census bureau methods said.

Also, census reports are based on voluntary statements by people being surveyed about their incomes.

"For whatever reason, respondents tend to underreport their family income," the census bureau says.

In Monterey County, monthly welfare payments for a family of four with no other income are $746 cash, plus $419 in food stamps. Children from low income families get free meals at local schools. A special federally funded program called WIC provides food for pregnant women and infants. In addition, the county owns 694 units of public housing, where eligible families can live for rent equal to 30 percent of their cash income. Or they can receive a voucher of up to $750 for rent.

Rippling River, on Carmel Valley Road, is one of Monterey County's few public housing facilites, which total just 640 units.

According to Ana Burns, deputy executive director of the Monterey County Housing Authority, 2,900 families are getting such vouchers, which they use to find housing in the private market.

"There are many more families that would qualify, but we're limited by the amount of housing money which we get from Washington," Burns said.

And government welfare and housing programs are for citizens and legal residents only, said Sylvia Flores-Grattan, manager of the Seaside office of the Monterey County Department of Social Services.

"A lot of families will have only one or two children who were born in this country and who are eligible for food stamps, and they end up trying to feed all their children with the food stamps for one child," she said.

Such families are referred to private food pantries and meal programs, Flores-Grattan said.

Feeding the children who walk in the door or who are in school isn't their biggest challenge in Monterey County, officials say. It's reaching families who, because of language barriers, lack of information or fear, are not seeking help with feeding their little ones.

Al Smith's
"Carmel Legends"

If someone ever asks you, "Where is THE STREET THAT NEVER WAS?", don't laugh off the question. The early planners of Carmel wanted to lay out a square-cornered gridwork of streets, and they did. But this left a sort of eccentric strip right along the beach, since the sea did not design its coastline by such righteous rules. This was solved by creating SCENIC DRIVE, a meandering lane that follows the whims of the ocean to the delight of thousands of visitors. But...right at the turnaround end of Ocean Avenue, this still left a small, sandy, buildable triangle; and there the planners drew in DEL MAR, a short street that never was, you'll find it on some older maps, and three houses were built along its inner line. They are still there — the Ames, the Browns and the Arnolds — but their access must be from Ocean or Scenic. Many interesting people have lived in these vulnerable beach-front homes, alternately glorying in the nearness of the sea and trembling at its awesome power. One was Archipenko, the famous sculptor, who found the scenery so distracting that he covered his windows with sheets, so he could get on with his work. Remember DEL MAR, a grand idea that never happened.

Board hears proposal for C.V. building ban

By MARY BROWNFIELD

ACTING COUNTY Counsel Adrienne Grover presented a series of proposals for a building limit in Carmel Valley to the Monterey County Board of Supervisors last week.

Responding to suggestions made by the League of Women Voters, LandWatch Monterey County, the Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club and the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, the county counsel's office outlined a possible ordinance that would:

■ allow development "that will not add, even incrementally," any new traffic to Carmel Valley Road, Rio Road or Highway 1;

■ prohibit the creation of new parcels (including any lot line adjustment which would create a new building site) until the Carmel Valley Master Plan no longer includes references to the Hatton Canyon Freeway and ensures that development will be compatible with available infrastructure; and

■ permit minimal development — including single-family residences on lots of record, additions and non-habitable structures — after a Highway 1 climbing lane and left-turn lanes on Carmel Valley Road have been constructed.

Grover said the proposed ordinance is legally feasible, though several policy issues — including an effective date that would affect projects already in the system — require decisions to be made by the board.

"What the ordinance's true effective date will be, regarding projects pending, the board needs to decide," Grover told The Pine Cone. "It's really discretionary."

Grover said the board will also need to rule on how to handle renovations of historic buildings while growth limitations are in place.

"The board needs to make some decision there about the relief they might grant historic resources and other things the board or public feels might deserve relief," Grover said.

Fearing that a temporary moratorium might become endless, she recommended that restrictions depend on the completion of county-controlled road improvements. Otherwise, she said, property owners could be indefinitely deprived of the use of their land.

"We don't want the moratorium duration dependent on some other organization like Caltrans," she said. "Given the history, where we've had an improvement for Highway 1 on the books for over 40 years, that's certainly not something we want it tied to."

Supervisor Potter is spearheading an effort to speed up work on a second lane uphill from Carmel Valley Road to Morse Drive — a project Caltrans says won't be completed until 2006.

The proposed ordinance to limit building will undergo CEQA review in December, and will be presented to the board in a public hearing Jan. 18, 2000, at 10 a.m.

"At that point, a really meaningful discussion can take place on some of those policy issues," Grover said.

French Poodle says neighbors made much ado about nothing

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE OWNER of the French Poodle restaurant at Junipero and Fifth — recently punished by the Carmel Planning Commission for installing a new exhaust fan without a permit — said the whole hullabaloo was an overreaction.

"I think the city's being completely preposterous about this," said Richard Zoellin, who owns and runs the restaurant. "I've complied. We could have gotten the complete issue done with in five minutes."

The controversy — involving the restaurant's new exhaust fan and the noise it generated — has since been resolved. With the help of city building official Tim Meroney, Zoellin installed plywood around the rooftop fan to baffle the sound that had been irritating the restaurant's neighbors. As soon as the baffling is permanently affixed to the roof, and shingles and trim are added, Meroney said the city will sign off on Zoellin's permit.

Although Carmel has no specific ordinances controlling the level of noise, any noise classified as Class D — annoying, harsh or prolonged "as to be injurious to the health, peace and comfort of any reasonable person of normal sensitiveness," according to the municipal code — is prohibited.

Decibel readings taken at the property line before the baffle was in place were just above 60, according to Meroney. Readings now show a level of 44 decibels at the property line.

"The noise is substantially reduced," he said. "I've talked to the neighbors, and they are happier."

Prominent architect's latest creation shows he's a kid at heart

By TAMARA GRIPPI

A CARMEL VALLEY man paid $4,000 for a tree house, but not just for any arboreal abode. This creative outdoor hideaway was created by Mickey Muennig, the architect who designed Big Sur's Post Ranch Inn.

Muennig, a long-time Big Sur resident, created the tree hut for a charity auction held by San Francisco's Strybing Arboretum in October. The auction — which featured the inventive tree dwelling designs of 13 prominent northern California architects — raised money for children's programs at the arboretum.

The architects designed their houses for specific gardens of the arboretum such as the Cloud Forests of Mexico, Asia or Australia. Muennig's design, "a simple hut," was created for the primitive plant garden.

Muennig explained that he wanted to keep his design as natural as possible with palm frond roofing and support poles from fallen redwood trees.

Jim Jeffery of Carmel Valley arrived on the last day of the 10-day auction and put in his $4,000 bid nearly a half-hour before closing. Jeffery said he felt confident that he could clinch the tree house. "I was sure because I was there and everybody else was playing on the Internet," he said.

"It's unique — typically Mickey Muennig," Jeffery said. "I'm was very happy to purchase it and return the design to this area."

The Mitchell Group — one of five real estate firms invited to participate in the show — sponsored two tree houses, including Muennig's design. Mitchell Group president, Hallie Mitchell Dow, was delighted to find out that Muennig's tree hut had been bought by a local.

"That was just the frosting on the cake," she said. "How appropriate."

Missy Jensen, the chairwoman of the "Up a Tree" fundraiser, dreamed up the auction two years ago in order to raise money for the arboretum's outreach programs.

"We bring school kinds in all through the year," Jensen said. During the school year and summer programs, children go on nature walks and learn about vegetables, flowers and how the Native Americans lived — all for free.

In addition to the architects donating their designs, San Francisco contractors donated their time to construct the tree houses — at a cost of $10,000 to $20,000 for each one, Jensen said.

The real estate firms each donated $2,500 to sponsor the trees.

"We were just thrilled to do it," said Mitchell Dow. "It was such a great concept, such a different approach."

Mickey Meunnig's tree house has found a home in Carmel Valley after being sold at a San Francisco fundraiser.

The fundraiser grossed $170,000, though Jensen isn't sure yet what the profits will be.

Meanwhile, Jeffery is busy setting up the thatched-roof tripod tree house at his Carmel Valley home this week.

"It's for the kids in all of us," he said.

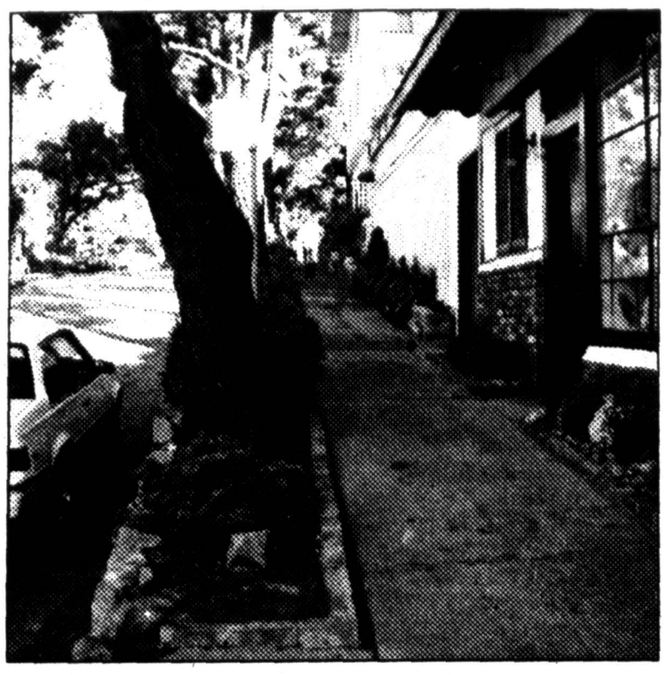
City will install handrail to prevent falls



A DANGEROUS drop-off at the edge of a sidewalk in downtown Carmel will soon get a new, wrought-iron handrail thanks to the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea and the Pine Inn. The handrail will eliminate the danger of people falling off the sidewalk onto Monte Verde Street, city officials say.

After only brief discussion, the Carmel Planning Commission voted Nov. 10 to install the handrail because it was "determined to be necessary for public safety," according to City Planner Ben Berto.

The city will pay for the handrail, which will complement the design features of the historic Pine Inn.

POODLE

from 5B

Meroney added that there was "more made out of it than was necessary, but we got it resolved and we're on our way to getting it completed."

Health hazard?

At its Oct. 27 meeting — in response to loud complaints by neighbors who said the noise of the fan was intolerable — the planning commission voted to require that the fan only run between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m., cutting short the restaurant's dinner service. Zoellin was told he had to remedy the noise and permit problems within a week, or he would be subjected to an injunction filed by the city and his restaurant would be shut down.

The issue arose when Zoellin had a new fan installed in August, after the restaurant's 30-year-old fan broke. Neighbors in the nearby apartment building complained about the noise the fan made, and Zoellin said he called the city for a copy of his permit to show them.

But no permit was on file, he discovered. According to Zoellin, Val's Heating and Plumbing had never gotten the permit, normally provided by the planning department over the counter.

"So they went down there and tried to get permit after the fact" on Aug. 18, he said. In order to get the installation permit, however, a rooftop covering for the fan had to be approved.

Zoellin asked that the rooftop covering requirement be waived, but Meroney replied in a Sept. 30 letter that the request was unfounded and gave Zoellin until Oct. 10 to get the proper permits and deal with the noise issue.

Saying they had not gotten any cooperation from Zoellin, the neighbors — Indira Aslan, Karleen and Hoyt Tarola and Michael Dean — filed complaints with the city.

In a letter to Carmel Mayor Ken White, Aslan said the noise had caused her to develop heart palpitations, and suggested that Hoyt Tarola's Sept. 11 heart attack might have been caused by it as well.

Dean told the planning commission he suffers from panic attacks and has visited the emergency room on several occasions because of attacks brought on by the fan keeping him awake at night.

But Zoellin said none of those concerns were ever conveyed to him.

"If I would have known that it was causing them heart murmurs, rather than getting 'Can you turn that goddamn thing off?' I would have reacted differently," he said. "I want no problems with the neighbors. This is a small town — we all have to get along."

Two new homes will replace old house

By MARY BROWNFIELD

TWO NEW houses will be permitted to rise from the dust of a demolished old home, the Carmel Planning Commission decided unanimously Nov. 10.

The existing house — built in 1939 but subjected to extensive modifications over the years — occupies two legal lots of record on Santa Rita between Second and Third Avenues.

The new two-story homes, both designed by a Monterey firm, Draftec, initially raised privacy concerns for neighbors. Ceejay Florani and Gabriel Baker, sent a letter to the city decrying the height of the homes and the potential infringement on their privacy by numerous bedroom windows.

But Agnes Falusi, applying for permission to build a home on the south lot with her husband George Siu, said the neighbors' concerns were addressed by changes to the design and landscaping along the property line.

The other new home — applied for by Steve Dallas — was also approved with only minor changes by the commission.
